OUR STORY

The Tamale Place is proudly owned by Angela Green and her husband Vladimir Ronces, along with Angela's mother, Leora Green. Their journey began when Angela embarked on a solo backpacking trip in Mexico. A couple of months into her trip, she happened upon a quaint restaurant in Acapulco—and met her future husband, Vladimir.

In 2003, the threesome opened "Tortilleria Angelita," selling homemade white corn tortillas, like the ones sold in Mexico. They quickly learned that while fresh tortillas are a staple in Mexico, it was somehow lost in translation in the United States.

In a twist of fate, customers began asking about good tamales—it turns out that what Indianapolis really needed was quality tamales.

So, Vladimir called upon his family's traditions, and Angela her knowledge and they started experimenting. Together they created traditional and creative tamales, and their customers loved them! Delighted with their find, customers started referring to the business as "The Tamale Place" and the name stuck!
